

SEPTEMBER 10-16, 2010

South Florida BUSINESS JOURNAL

POWER LEADERS

PRIVATE COMPANIES

The Business Journal is proud to provide our first special section on the Powers Leaders of South Florida's Private Companies. In our section, which is based on our list of the region's 25 largest private companies, you will find key facts about some of South Florida's top executives who run larger, private companies that are vital to our economy. Their contact details are included, along with highlights of their business careers and education. We also provide personal insights so that you can get to know them better.

TOM MURPHY JR.

*Chairman and CEO, Coastal Construction Group
No. 21
www.coastalconstruction.com*

■ Career highlights: Murphy Jr. was introduced to construction at an early age by his father, Thomas P. Murphy Sr., who owned a general contracting business that built mostly government and public projects around the state. At age 19, Murphy became Florida's youngest licensed general contractor. He was a laborer, then carpenter apprentice, journeyman carpenter, foreman and finally contractor. At the age of 21, he co-founded Seaboard Construction and, as president, brought the firm to a position on the ENR 400.

After buying out his partners, Murphy sold Seaboard in 1989 to one of the largest builders in the world. Soon after, he formed Coastal Construction Co. with his brother John. Known for its work in the luxury residential market, Coastal built and branched out into commercial construction and multifamily developments based on the Murphy philosophy of offering excellent quality construction, attention to detail and client satisfaction. Today, he oversees the direction of all four Coastal companies as chairman and CEO.

Friday, September 10, 2010

Power Leaders

Private Companies

The Business Journal is proud to provide our first special section on the Powers Leaders of South Florida's Private Companies. In our section, which is based on our list of the region's 25 largest private companies, you will find key facts about some of South Florida's top executives who run larger, private companies that are vital to our economy. Their contact details are included, along with highlights of their business careers and education. We also provide personal insights so that you can get to know them better.

Tom Murphy Jr.

Chairman and CEO, Coastal Construction Group, No. 21, www.coastalconstruction.com

- Career highlights: Murphy was introduced to construction at an early age by his father, Thomas P. Murphy Sr., who owned a general contracting business that built mostly government and public projects around the state. At age 19, Murphy became Florida's youngest licensed general contractor. He was a laborer, then carpenter apprentice, journeyman carpenter, foreman and finally contractor. At the age of 21, he co-founded Seaboard Construction and, as president, brought the firm to a position on the ENR 400.

After buying out his partners, Murphy sold Seaboard in 1989 to one of the largest builders in the world. Soon after, he formed Coastal Construction Co. with his brother John. Known for its work in the luxury residential market, Coastal built and branched out into commercial construction and multifamily developments based on the Murphy philosophy of offering excellent quality construction, attention to detail and client satisfaction. Today, he oversees the direction of all four Coastal companies as chairman and CEO.